two persons had been killed, at Yarmouth and one at King's Lynn. Panic followed the raid. The government is taking fresh precautionary measures all along the east coast and in London. Insurance risks against damage by German airships in this city is rising.

In the damaged towns the terror which followed the attack was unabated today. A mad search for German spies was begun as a result of reports that signals had been flashed to the raiding airships at Yarmouth. According to these reports, a signal was given from a house near the Aquarium Theatre in Yarmouth just before the attack began.

Owing to the darkness of the night and extreme districts visited by the hostile airships, it was impossible to tell accurately how many ships were in the squadron, but it is reported that there were at least six, perhaps more.

Gunfire was heard off Humberston, on the North Sea coast, shortly after the attack had been made, and it was reported that one of the German airships had been shot down, but this report lacked official confirmation at the time this dispatch was written.

YARMOUTH FIRST PLACE ATTACKED

Yarmouth was the first place attacked. After dropping their bombs there the raiders turned southward in the direction of Cromer. Then they turned inland. King's Lynn seemed to have been the last point attacked.

A telegram to the Daily Telegraph from King's Lynn says:

"The night was very dark, but a few persons here claim to have seen the airships which attacked the town. The first missile absolutely destroyed the hydraulic engine house at the docks. The next fell upon a house near the docks.

"This bomb went clean through the roof and two floors to the basement, but killed no one. The worst damage was done in the central part of the town, near the fine old gothic gray friars' tower. Here one bomb totally destroyed three cottages in Beckett street, killing a lad and badly maiming his sister.

"A man had both legs broken."

An Exchange Telegraph Company dispatch from King's Lynn gave the following details:

"One house was struck by a German bomb and was demolished and a seventeen-year-old boy and his father were completely buried in the wreck. Both were dug out safely, however, having had a narrow escape from death. So far as known seven high powered bombs were dropped here.

"It is believed that the aircraft went toward the east after leaving King's Lynn.

AIRSHIPS STAYED HIGH IN THE AIR.

The airships remained very high in the air and the buzz of their motors was barely audible. As soon as the attacks began all lights were extinguished and most of the residents took refuge in the cellars of their homes."

A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Great Yarmouth (the geographical name for Yarmouth) said:

"Three bombs were dropped upon Yarmouth last night. The following account of the attack was given by Arthur Harbord, a member of the municipal council:

"About 8:30 o'clock last night when numbers of persons were in the streets and places of amusement were in full swing an airship passed over the city and dropped bombs which did considerable damage.

"One of the victims here was a shoemaker, named Smith, who was at work in his shop, about fifty yards from St. Peter's Church, when a bomb was dropped on or near the building and his head was blown off.

"A number of buildings in St. Peter's road were badly damaged."

Other press reports from Yarmouth said that green and red lights had been seen at sea about the time of the German airship attack which indicated that a German warship had accompanied the aerial craft from German waters.

At Yarmouth and other towns attacked the soldiers turned out and fired volleys into the air with their rifles. Afterwards the soldiers helped calm the frightened residents and to clean up the debris left by the bombs.

The period of time covered by the attack was about two and a half hours.

Yarmouth reports that the first bombs fell there about 8:30 and the last missiles were dropped at King's Lynn about 11. Yarmouth, where the attack began, is 110 miles from London and 260 miles from the German coast. Germany, the base from which the airships are believed to have come.

The airships had to cross the North Sea, passing over the fleets of British warship patrols.

A dispatch from Amsterdam says that airships supposed to be German were seen passing Kollum, Vlieland and Terneuzen Islands early this morning on route from the west to the east.

From Vlieland it was reported that gunfire had been heard to the east, indicating that the airships were being fired upon by a British warship. It was reported from Gravesend, only twenty miles from London, that air craft had been seen over there last night passing in a northwesterly direction, but this report was doubted.

DETAILS OF THE AIRSHIP RAID ON CAST TOWN OF YARMOUTH

After a seven-hour cruise of Yarmouth by the police it was said today by the municipal authorities that only two persons had been killed.

A man and a woman were killed and another man was severely wounded. Most of the damage was done in Lancaster road and near the York road fish wharf. In York road the entire front was blown out of one house and many other buildings were more or less seriously damaged.

So far as known no airship was seen in Yarmouth and some persons believe that the damage was done by aeroplanes instead of dirigibles. It was stated that two craft which might have been either aeroplanes or airships came in from the direction of the North Sea about 8:30 o'clock and remained over the city about ten minutes. Then they flew eastward.

About 11 o'clock some persons claim to have seen another aerial craft over Yarmouth, but this is doubted.

The police have received no evidence of signalling from Yarmouth, nor have they any information to support the rumor current here to the effect that a warship believed to be German flashed red and green lights off the shore during the raid.

AEROPLANES ARE BLAMED.

Municipal officials of Yarmouth took testimony from a number of persons who claimed to have seen the raiders and announced that, according to "official belief," the damage was done by aeroplanes.

Six bombs were dropped in Yarmouth instead of three, as originally reported. One of them fell into the Yare River, and two others fell into the sea.

One of these exploded near a fishing boat, which was sunk. Another dropped close to Trinity house.

The greatest damage was done to St. Peter's church, which was broken in houses on the west side of the Yare.

The damage is conservatively estimated at from $250 to $300, but it is believed that it will be much higher.

The debris of the home they were extricated with slight injuries.

"The fourth bomb wrecked a house in Albert street. We understand that this airship was the one that dropped two bombs upon the castle at Sandringham.

"Both missed the palace by many miles, falling at opposite ends of the estate.

"One bomb was dropped at King's Lynn. It was apparently a dud when they left the airship. I could see a slow explosion, which brightly illuminated a large area, though the damage was confined to a small local fire.

"Where bombs fell on the ground they blew holes in the earth from eight to ten yards in circumference and six feet deep.

TWO AIRSHIPS PASSED CROMER.

Two or more airships were in the German patrol squadron that passed over Cromer last night, according to reports from that town, but they did not drop any bombs there.

As soon as the approach of the airships was signalled, about 8:30 o'clock, all the lights of the town were extinguished. The airships descended the town, then proceeded in the direction of Worborough.

At Sheringham, over which a German airship passed about 8:45, the airship was visible to the naked eye. It circled the church and dropped a bomb which hit a house but did not explode.

Another bomb was dropped between Cromer and Sheringham, and this one also failed to explode.

The airships disappeared seaward at Runton, a resort adjoining Cromer. One airship was seen about 2:40 feet in the air by a number of spectators, including members of the town-magistrate, who claim that if they had had guns in their hands they could have shot down the craft.

The damage to property in the town is estimated at about $1,500. Two unexploded bomb-shaped bombs were picked up at Yarmouth. They were 4 1/2 inches in diameter.

MAN DYING FROM FOUR-STORY LEAP

MRS. ALBERT PROCTOR, missing Gloucester mother, for whom children are weeping.

The State at the trial contended that because Vannan was incensed at Hardy for stealing his liquor, which he had secreted in the woods for sale to the veterans of the soldiers' home, he fired at both Hardy and his wife, Cora Hardy.

Hardy died in a few hours after the shooting, but Mrs. Hardy lingered between two weeks and was a witness for the prosecution at the trial.

After conviction in the Kennelbush murder case, Justice E. E. Emery Beane in January, a year ago, the case was sent to the law courts on the grounds that the verdict was contradicted by the evidence.

The law court nullified the verdict.

Silk Hat Harry's Divorce Suit

BASEBALL 'TRUST'
TRIAL IS OPENED

CINCINNATI, Jan. 28. — The Federal League injunction suit charging that organized baseball is a trust will be heard before Judge Landis' Court today.

One of the points in the defense of organized baseball will be based on Section 5 of the Clayton act, recently passed by Congress, according to a report current here today. The section which the attorneys for the defense are expected to cite reads:

"That the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce."

The Federal League's bill of complaint asks that organized baseball be declared a trust in "violation of trade and commerce."

It is said the attorneys for the defendants will contend that as organized baseball deals in labor it cannot be said to violate the law.

TENOR TO TAKE STAND.

President Tenor of the National League is among those likely to take the witness stand.

It is predicted that Judge Landis, who is widely known as a baseball enthusiast, will use his knowledge of the game in questioning witnesses.

According to the affidavit filed so far, the following players are alleged to have been offered bail players by the Federal League and either accepted or refused by the players:

Heenan (refused), $10,000; Perini (accepted), $10,000; Hamilton (accepted—reconsidered), $7,000; Falkenberg (accepted), $10,000; Underhill (refused), $10,000; Voss (refused), $10,000; Cooper (refused), $10,000; Gaffney (refused), $10,000; Baumgardner (refused), $10,000; Kahler (accepted—reconsidered), $10,000.

THIRD TO BUY IN IT.

A affidavit also purport to show that Leo Magee, now manager of the Brooklyn Federal League, drew $10,000 as a member of the St. Louis National, and that Ed Knabauer, now with the Pittsburgh Federal, drew $10,000 from the Pittsburgh National.

The contention will be made that baseball is not interstate commerce and that the organization is not subject to the Federal laws.

The charge that Wegman, Ward and Gilmore are not affiliated in bringing their suit will also be made.

MAGNETS ON HAND.

Five attorneys were lined up on the side of the organized forces, while three represented the Federal League. But attracting more attention than these perhaps was the large number of baseball men present at the hearing. Among them were Harry Herrmann, chairman of the National Commission; R. T. Johnson, president of the American League and a member of the commission; Charles A. Conkley of the Chicago American League club; Robert Lee Helges, president of the St. Louis Browns; Schuyler Brinton, president of the St. Louis Cardinals; Captain T. J. Hunter of the New York Yankees; Barney Trevisan, president of the Pittsburgh Pirates; Roger Bresnahan, manager of the Cincinnati Reds; Ed Navin, president of the Detroit Tigers; President James G. Climer of the Federal League; Phil Hall of the St. Louis Federal League club; Robert H. Ward of the Brooklyn Federal, and President Robinson of the Buffalo Federal.

BRAVES TO START TRAINING MARCH

The world champion Braves will begin training at Macon, Ga., on March 1, according to the plans of Secretary Herman Nickerson which were just completed.

The players will put in about a month of strenuous work at their Georgian camp and then start home, playing exhibition games en route.

The first glimpse of the Braves will be when Manager Stallings leads his team onto the diamond at Fenway Park on April 15 to play an exhibition game with the St. Louis Cardinals.

This game should be of interest to the fans because it will follow so closely on the Spring training done from the camp at Macon, Ga.

The regular season of the National League opens April 11, at Fenway Park, the Braves playing the Phillies.

The training trip exhibition games as arranged to date are as follows:

March 15—Atlanta at Atlanta.
March 16—Boston at Boston.
March 17—Detroit at Detroit.
March 18—Cleveland at Cleveland.
March 19—Washington at Washington.
March 20—St. Louis at St. Louis.
March 21—Philadelphia at Philadelphia.

Age Limit Breaks Up Exeter's Track Team

EXETER, N. H., Jan. 28.—Six of Exeter's athletes have been placed over the twenty-year age limit and the Exeter track team is broken up.

The discovery was somewhat of a surprise, as it was thought that the average of the age limit would not affect the Exeterians.

The Object of Love May Be Unchanging—but the Subject Changes with Great Frequency

THE AMERICAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

The Husband Hunters

Judith Mortimer Hears That Jimmy Compton-Blake Is Engaged and Meets the Girl

By ANN LISLE

"I've a splendid new customer for you, Miss Mortimer—just what you have been hunting for. This young man, Mr. Compton-Blake, is a real find. He's got a lot of money and a lot of manly things to make meeting her a very paying investment."

"Oh, Mrs. Carter, I've some news to break to you. I'm not taking on any new customers. My sister has a little dance studio, and in two weeks she thinks I'll be expert enough to come in as a partner," replied Judith.

"Good heavens, Miss Mortimer, you don't mean to say you're going to take up dancing? I can't quite make out whether you're over-ambitious or over-ambitious. Well, you'll have to meet Mr. Compton-Blake, anyway, for I told her to be here this morning."

"I'm sure you'll find time for her. Only to let her see how she likes your work, she'll be the dearest girl. A little red-headed beauty, and they say her engagement to Jimmy Compton-Blake will be announced shortly, though, of course, you mustn't repeat it."

"Of the reasons I've always liked you, I don't think it's difficult to see that you seem to carry tales."

"I don't know anything about the Marston divorce case. They're young people. I'm not anxious for my parents to play together, and that his mother's ready to make the sacrifice for his sake, but old Marston is mad about some girl."

"Don't know anything about it, Mrs. Carter," said Judith, and refrained from reminding that lady that she had just pronounced her of praise to the girl who could not carry tales from house to house.

A PRETTY LITTLE GIRL OF THE UGLY TYPE

Willie Torrance came to presently and proved to be a very pretty girl of the ugly, self-conscious type. She seemed rather to enjoy Mrs. Carter's teasing about her affair with young Compton-Blake, and Judith found herself feeling very uneasy over the possibility that it was true.

"From the time she had been a baby Bonnie Belle Mortimer had been in the habit of going after winter clothes, and she had been in the habit of getting started, her new dress studio had paid her bill for the first fortnight's instruction. But lack of everything else that Bonnie had had doing Judith had recognized a queer little determination to get her feet set to climb to the definite social position represented by Jimmy Compton-Blake."

"Judith had a queer feeling of revolt at the thought that the mother, who, after all, had been so kind to her, was now being used to work for it. It should have captured the particular man Bonnie had been working for. All through the day Judith wondered if it would be worth while to tell Bonnie of Jimmy Compton-Blake's engagement, or to leave her to find out the supposition that all Bonnie's conversation had been about the young man had been just very little flattery."

"On the way home Judith remembered how Bonnie had refused an introduction to young Compton-Blake when Reginald Burke had taken her to him over to her table in the tearoom."

"Of course Bonnie couldn't possibly be interested in a man she didn't

"I thought her sister, 'Bonnie' had been having her little joke, and I'm about as big a goose as a woman of her class can conveniently be."

"Judith wouldn't be chasing up a man with a cold-blooded head of business and marring him some way just because he had position and money. Why, I'm thinking in terms that would keep the head-hunters of the Amazon. I'm a regular household hunter, I am, even if I'm only doing a little mental matchmaking for my sister. I won't mention Miss Torrance to Bonnie. It would be an insult to her intelligence to think of speaking of it."

REHIND KEEPS REVERTING

TO THE NEWS SHE HAD HEARD. But all evening long, while Bonnie and Reginald Burke were taking turns in giving her instructions in the mysteries of fox trot and waltz, her mind kept turning to young Compton-Blake and Willie Torrance.

"Judith, you're getting to be a bore. I only to let her see how she likes your work, she'll be the dearest girl. A little red-headed beauty, and they say her engagement to Jimmy Compton-Blake will be announced shortly, though, of course, you mustn't repeat it."

"Of the reasons I've always liked you, I don't think it's difficult to see that you seem to carry tales."

"I don't know anything about the Marston divorce case. They're young people. I'm not anxious for my parents to play together, and that his mother's ready to make the sacrifice for his sake, but old Marston is mad about some girl."

"Don't know anything about it, Mrs. Carter," said Judith, and refrained from reminding that lady that she had just pronounced her of praise to the girl who could not carry tales from house to house."

Two Kittens

EVERYBODY likes a kitten. At sight of its fluffy face and collar, with its blue ribbon and jingly-bell, its chubby smile and its feet like down-stuffed cushions, even a little "frail-cad" kid yawns toward it. With a little pink dot. Women folks who tighten their skirts and hold up their feet when a friendly dog goes by rather up a kitten with much caressing and baby talk. Staid gentlemen who never unband, who study the tops of their companions' eyebrows through tortoise-shell rimmed eyeglasses, these same look gratified when a kitten plays with the buttons on their cuffs and scrambles about their shoulders. And the painfully erect young chap will grin with the warmth that's spreading round his heart when a snowy baby cat arches its back and slides against his back drives there.

And so it is with the kitten-girl. You may hold forth on her lack of common sense, and you may wonder when she will ever grow up; you may glower at her frills and fluff, and you may vow that plain girls with smooth hair and sober clothes, who never purr or fluff a bell, are the very girls for you. But just the same, you, too, will "Oh, ah" over the kitten-girl. You'll strive to get her to talk with you, and you'll get the same entranced grin on your face, when she tries her kitten ways on you, as the chap in evening clothes with his baby cat preening him above all others. The world couldn't do without the whimsical, fluffy, purring, appealing things called KITTENS.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

ABSURDLY TYRANNICAL

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am twenty-one and have been keeping company with a young man for a year and a half. But all her unkind and self-centered emotions vanished when she heard Reginald Burke's next remark.

"Oh, by the way, Miss Bonnie, that girl who said that a girl was always as young as she looked. But she didn't look anything like you. You look like a young woman who has been with a man for a long time."

"Will you girls be able to take care of your pupils, or won't you need to be taught some more?" asked Judith looked at him again, and heard Bonnie's answer.

"Judith, I'm a girl, and I'm strong and I think she'll be able to dance with me. But Judith said she was strong and I think she'll be able to dance with me. But Judith said she was strong and I think she'll be able to dance with me."

"It's not enough," said Reginald Burke positively.

But Judith was not to be deterred.

"I should think that sometimes you sailors would get dreadfully homesick," remarked the secretary of the Bright Star Boat Quadrant.

The experienced seaman pondered also about his head.

"Well, not so much as you'd think," he replied after a moment's reflection. "We're never at home long enough."

"What are you doing with that 'Tack' him to the dog show?"

"Well, you can't win a prize with him."

"Well, they may give me a special prize for showing the kind of a dog that no dog ought to be."

The little, mild, bald man had settled down in the train to read, and, feeling drowsy after a trying day at home, he prescribed it successfully for twenty years in even the severest cases of eczema, ringworm, rashes, and many other tormenting, disfiguring skin diseases. Added by warm baths with Resinol Soap, Resinol Ointment makes the skin soft perfectly healthy, quickly, easily and at little cost. Try them and see! Sold by all druggists.

The Fortunes of Fanny

She Meets Crandall Again and a Surprising Incident Follows

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XLVI.

Comet, 1914, New Comer.

FANNY HEDDEN'S mind was full of bitter thoughts as she walked up-town this afternoon of early spring. She felt as if life lay before her, a narrow, sandy road that led nowhere except over treacherous lands. She told herself that she was fit for nothing except the kind of work she was doing now, and that this meant pity or patronage from people no better than herself.

There are hundreds of other girls with the same ideas—so many that one's heart aches in thinking of them. For they are wrong in their views from the first. They fail to see that housework is as honorable as dressmaking; that domestic service is less degrading than work in a factory.

But all this is a digression from Fanny. When she was tired of walking, she took the car to the park and strolled aimlessly about. It was late in the afternoon when she seated herself on one of the benches on the edge of a walk, and gazed sadly about. She actually wished that she was dead. A man strolling past, glanced at her, hesitated, walked on a few steps, but returning, sat down on the other end of her bench. She was so lost in her miserable thoughts that she did not notice him nor remove her eyes from the view on the opposite side of the park.

Her eyes flashed, then, as she heard her name. She scarcely suppressed a cry of alarm as she turned and found herself looking into the face of Jim Crandall.

"You!" she faltered, the color leaping to her face. "You!"

She started to her feet, but he caught her by the arm and pulled her down upon the bench.

JIM CRANDALL PULLS HER DOWN ON THE BENCH

"Look not," he cautioned anxiously. "You will attract attention."

A woman walking by looked curiously at Fanny, who sat there with her arms crossed and her head bowed. He did not observe that one of two women in a passing electric car had been looking at her. Her eyes flashed, then, as she heard her name. She scarcely suppressed a cry of alarm as she turned and found herself looking into the face of Jim Crandall.

"I see you as old as you used to be," he said. "There was a cynical smile on his face, but Fanny did not smile back. She was a favor to ask him, he continued."

"It is the same old story, Fanny. I'm not happy. I know from your face that you are not happy. Fanny did not reply. The man changed his tone and became pleading, gentle."

"Fanny," he urged, "I did not treat you fairly, but you might forgive me. I'm not happy. I know from your face that you are not happy. Fanny did not reply. The man changed his tone and became pleading, gentle."

She nodded, but did not look at him. He held his hand to his forehead, as if he were in pain. He held his hand to his forehead, as if he were in pain. He held his hand to his forehead, as if he were in pain.

He held his hand to his forehead, as if he were in pain. He held his hand to his forehead, as if he were in pain. He held his hand to his forehead, as if he were in pain.

So violent was the action that a young man, crossing the road back of the bench, noticed the movement and stopped in amazement, then walking a few paces away, he stopped again and stood in the shelter of a tree, watching the man, whose features he could not discern, for Crandall had been pulled down over his eyes.

Fanny's face, still turned to the west, shone faintly in the falling light. Fanny Hedden moistened her dry lips. "I have nothing to say," she muttered. "Except that I do not want to see you again."

She looked at Crandall, and he smiled sadly, with seeming tenderness. "I deserve my punishment," he said. "I know it. But you will surely tell me what work you are doing now—whether you are happy or not."

The dark memories which, had thronged the girl's brain, during his pleading were suddenly pierced by the swift recollection of her present situation. She threw back her head and spoke defiantly, bitterly.

"You!" she exclaimed. "I will tell you what work you are doing now—whether you are happy or not?"

You CAN'T Eat Kittens and You CAN Eat Eggs

They Let You Keep a Cat in a Big City and They Won't Let You Keep a Hen. WHY?

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

Suppose you found yourself in a big city of "Foolish Land" and read these signs:

"You may keep a rattle snake, but you mustn't keep a hen.
"You may keep a horned toad, but you mustn't keep a duck.
"You may keep dynamite in your house, but you must NOT keep molasses candy."

Those signs would make you smile, and you would say: "This is well named 'Foolish Land.'"

What about the regulations of the big city in which you live? The law says you may keep a cat, but you can't keep a hen. Two days ago an unfortunate child bitten by a cat died of hydrophobia, after suffering months of agony.

Hens do not give hydrophobia to children, and they do give eggs.

Yet you may keep a cat, a useless pet, spreading hydrophobia and spreading disease germs. But you cannot keep a hen. Also in the city in which you live you may keep a dog, utter ly useless, but you may not keep a goat or a cow to give milk. The cat gives kittens, which you must cruelly drown, and which you can't eat. But it is legal to keep her.

The hen would give useful eggs. You can't keep her. The dog will give you puppies, and you can't eat them. But you may keep the dog and let your neighbors risk having their children bitten and infected with a horrible disease. The cow gives milk, but you can't keep a cow.

WHY IS IT?
Where is the common sense in such regulations?
The individual very fond of a cat or dog and very careless about the rights and welfare of others will tell you: "I LIKE a cat or a dog. It is my dear pet. I love it. I would be unhappy without it."

Somebody else might say: "I love a goat, a hen, a pig; I can't be happy without it."

But the government says: "You MUST do without it, happy or not."

Why is it?

Why is THIS not named "Foolish Land?"
A cat has its long nice fur. A child has a cat and the diphtheria. The child handles the cat, and the fur becomes filled with the germs of diphtheria—or scarlet fever, or measles, or smallpox, if that happens to be the case.

Then the cat, having been petted by the poor sick child, wanders off to visit another nice cat belonging to some other child that is well.

The two cats exchange views—AND GERMS.

The cat that belongs to the child that is well takes home a supply of germs to that child who is well, and then we have a plague of infantile diseases, and the doctors prosper AND WONDER.

How long will it take this "Foolish Land" to make its laws sensible and say: "You may NOT keep pets that give inedible kittens, or dogs that supply you with useless puppies, because they are dangerous to others and out of place in a city."
"You can't keep cows for the milk or hens for the eggs, for while they are harmless, they also are out of place in a city."

Why must we only banish the animals that might be useful and permit misguided human beings to keep the worthless, dangerous, disease spreading, hydrophobia breeding nuisances?

More Truth Than Poetry
By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

You Never Can Tell

DON'T sewal at the fellow you meet on the street
Who asks for the price of a beer,
Don't tell him you think he's a jam and a beat
And send him away with a sneer,
For maybe some day a rich uncle will die
And leave him a million or two,
And he'll buy up your notes and with venomous gloats
Collect 'em the day they are due.

DON'T growl at the guard who won't open the door
When you want to get out of the train,
You will not help any by getting him sore,
And protests are futile and vain.
And maybe some day he will get on the force
And, deaf to your piteous pleading,
Will stop you at night in the height of your fight
And run you in rudely for speeding.

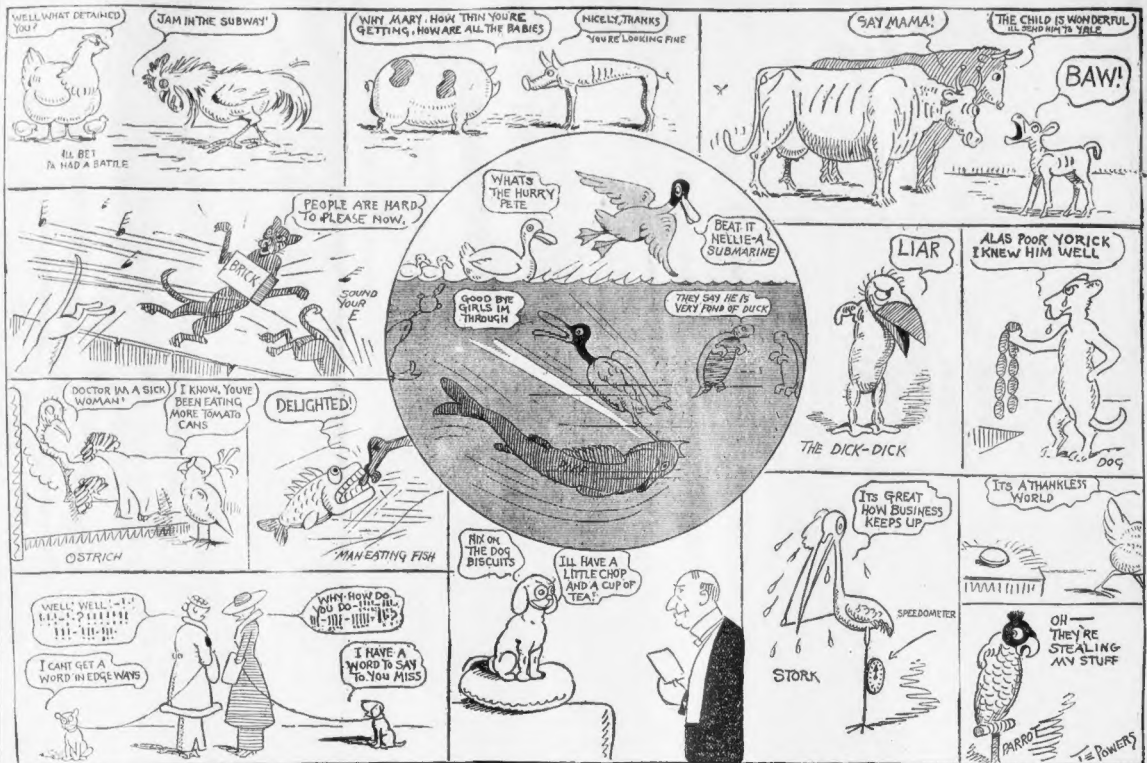

DON'T scold the small urchin who viciously shies
The snowball that knocks off your hat,
Harsh words would sound bad from a man of your size
And wouldn't avail much at all that.
And maybe the kid will some day fill the chair
That Bryan is striving to grace,
And will give you the boot with a hideous hoot
When you ask an ambassador's place.

Possibly
Perhaps what the President was trying to say in Indianapolis was that Secretary McAdoo would be just the man to keep a second term in the family.

Disappointing
It must depress Mr. Bryan dreadfully to see Congress appropriating money for battleships that it might devote to the endowment of Chauncey.

When the Animals Are Able to Talk to Us

Copyright, 1915, by the Star Company

Professor Garner says the time is coming when our cats and dogs will speak our language—or we'll speak theirs. Also we see what Tom Powers thinks will happen then. Reminds us of a story about a man whipping his horse up a hill. Horse turns round and says, "Easy with the whip; I'm doing my best." Man gasps out, "Well, I'm blessed—first time I ever heard a horse talk." Dog running alongside looks up and says, "Same here."

Mysteries of Nature and Science

Power Hidden in the Sunbeams of Which We Have Not Yet Availed Ourselves Much More Effectively
Than Did Archimedes More Than 2,000 Years Ago

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

"IN a motion picture play a scientist, Archimedes I believe, is supposed to have set fire to a Roman fleet by mounting several hundred mirrors on a disk in such a manner as to make them all cast their reflection of the sun's light upon one point. Do you think that the reflection obtained would be of sufficient density to ignite wood? And if so might not this reflector be used advantageously for many purposes? N. G. H."

The history of the defence by Archimedes of the great Sicilian city of Syracuse against the army and fleet of the Roman general, Marcellus, is the source from which the author of your motion picture play has drawn the idea of the burning mirrors setting fire to the attacking ships.

If you read Plutarch's account of that famous siege you will conclude that never has the power of the human hand been more triumphantly exhibited than it was by Archimedes. Although he had no gunpowder, he managed to make artillery of such tremendous effectiveness that nothing could stand against it. Instead of cannon balls he hurled stones weighing from ten up to a hundred pounds, the driving power being furnished by some ingenious combination of springs, the details of which have not come down to us.

Engines Wrecked Ships

He also invented engines furnished with great cranes and grappling hooks, which, leaning over the walls of the beleaguered town, seized the Roman ships moored close to the walls, and lifting them high in the air, until they spun helplessly round and round, tossed them down again with such force and suddenness that they were wrecked and their crews drowned. The fact just mentioned, viz. that the Roman ships (which, of course, were small affairs as compared with ours today) anchored themselves close to the walls, for the sake of supplying or despoiling them, or of finding opportunities for sealing them, accounts for the story that one of Archimedes' engines of destruction, which spread terror as well as death among the Romans, was a gigantic sailing mirror, or combination of mirrors, with which he managed to set the ships' sails on fire by concentrating the sunbeams upon them.

If all the early historians were agreed in ascribing this feat to Archimedes, there would be no difficulty in accepting the story as historically true, but neither Polybius, Livy nor Plutarch include the story of that one of Archimedes' wonderful engines, and the story makes its first appearance later. Still, it may be true. With the ships lying directly against the walls, Archimedes would have to throw his burning ray only a few feet or yards, in order to reach some inflammable object, which once being set afire might cause the destruction of the vessel.

Utilizing Sunbeams

The principle has often been employed in modern times in the effort to utilize the sunbeams as a source of mechanical power. A number of different inventors have contrived combinations of reflectors, all concentrating their rays upon a common focus, by means of which a degree of heat much greater than that necessary to kindle wood is readily obtained. But in these solar engines, or solar motors, as they are called, the purpose is not to produce fire, but to heat water in a boiler, and thus obtain steam to run an engine.

There is, of course, a few years ago, a solar motor in operation near Pasadena, Cal., capable of producing mechanical energy equivalent to ten horsepower. Its reflector consists of nearly 200 small mirrors, arranged on a dish-shaped frame, and concentrating their rays upon a suspended boiler containing a hundred gallons of water. The system of mirrors faces the sun, and within an hour after the solar beams strike the boiler shows a steam pressure of 150 pounds.

The heat at the focus is so intense that a stick of wood thrust into it bursts into flame like a match, and copper is melted in a few minutes.

A Romantic Wonder

These facts suffice to show that there is nothing improbable in the story of Archimedes' feat at Syracuse, as far as the degree of heat obtainable by such means is concerned. The power that is in the sunbeams is a kind of necromantic wonder to many persons, so you may convince yourself by making an experiment with a burning-glass in any public place. A vast amount of useful power could be obtained by such means in any country where the sun shines unclouded during most of the day, but the mechanical difficulties are considerable, and, for the present at least, we have more easily available sources of energy at our disposal. The power of the sunbeams, like that of the winds, is only utilized when nature permits. Man has not yet seized upon it with a master's hand, as he has upon some other of the energies about him.

In-Shoots

A systemless enterprise is like a systemless rudder.

Many a failure has been caused by mistaking rainbows for opportunity.

Though not so foolish, the young fool is generally more impulsive than the old fool.

Much as we may admire those lady cigarette smokers, we cannot forget that it would be better for their teeth if they would chew plug tobacco.

When it comes to swats, we always seem to get what the other fellow deserves.

A mixture of politics and religion is liable to be followed by more or less fermentation.

Distance also lends enchantment to the girl who has been eating onions.

The hungry man always disagrees with the professional charity worker as to the virtues of the bread line.

Epigrams and Sayings

THERE is something vitally wrong in the blood of a man who reveals the same unhealed wound year after year, for it is the impulse of healthy Nature to heal wounds. So is there something radically wrong in the makeup of the person who shows you the same countenance some year after year, for it is also the wish and purpose of progressive Nature that we shall outgrow our early griefs. He who does not have a right to our pity, but not to our admiration.

Man is not satisfied with the same rude vehicles and implements which he used two hundred years ago, and why should he be blamed for the progressing also in the matter of greed? Just as the torchlight has given way to electricity, so must demons give way to a broader spirituality.

The wife who devotes herself to covering up and condoning the sins of a notoriously bad husband gives poor encouragement to other and better men.

The woman who clings to the memory of an unfaithful man is not constant; she is merely stubborn.

All beauty is a record of truth and harmony in a past incarnation. It is divorces those qualities in this life, it must expect deformity and discord in the next.

Whatever we intensely desire must come to us. It is only a question of the force and constancy of our desire.

There are people who would like to get a "corner" on all the sympathy in the world. They are never happy unless everybody they meet is feeling sorry for them.

Men have broader views than women; they get outside of themselves far more. They dwell less in their own emotions, and are consequently more interesting companions.

AT FIVE

By JANE McLEAN

HOW I love the clink of the china,
And the humming katie, too;
And you, in the low gray arm chair,
Waiting for the tea to brew.

Outside all the world is dreary,
Trees drip with a steady rain,
But I watch the puddles idly
Through the misty window pane.

Then you pour the fragrant cupful,
Pass it smiling to me,
And our eyes meet as you murmur,
"Do you take two lumps or three?"
